THE CONTRIBUTION OF LIBRARIES TO RESEARCH

In recent years the part played by libraries in the promotion of research has become increasingly important. Librarians no longer consider that their duty ends with the cataloguing and conserving of the collections in their charge. They now strive to have their resources used to the greatest possible extent for the promotion of research. They also collaborate with the staff of their institution in locating and securing the publications of most importance to particular problems and do everything in their power to relieve those occupied with research of all unnecessary effort connected with consulting the literature. At present it is rarely necessary for the research personnel of the larger institutions to go to the library to consult the publications of interest to them. These are now very largely brought to their laboratories either in the original printed form or as the more recently introduced microfilm copies.

This improved service rendered by the libraries to the investigator has called for a considerable effort especially in the larger institutions, and its continued extension has become possible only through the introduction of the microfilm copying. This is due to the fact that original research reports are in practically all cases published in periodicals, together with many others on more or less closely related subjects. Hence, when a bound or unbound periodical is in use by one person, the numerous papers accompanying the one in which he is interested are not available for the use of others. This inconvenience can be overcome only by furnishing microfilm copies of the individual papers instead of allowing the entire group in a given volume to be monopolized by one individual.

In a large institution where there are many workers who may have need of a given periodical at the same time, there is no question of the advantage of microfilm copying for improving the service rendered to all. Of even greater importance, however, is that it permits such a library to place its collections at the disposal of many persons at distant points, and this for the present may be considered the outstanding advantage of microfilm copying.

Although the majority of those engaged in research in this country enjoy the advantages provided by the larger research institutions, there are still many who have to depend upon their own efforts to obtain the original literature needed by them in their work. It is these who will eventually profit most from the continued extension of microfilm copying service.

CURRENT LIST OF MEDICAL LITERATURE is published weekly and lists of RECENT BOOK ACQUISITIONS are issued several times per year as supplements. The subscription price for both is $5.00 per year in the United States and $6.50 per year in other countries. The Recent Book Acquisitions may be obtained separately at $1.00 per year.
